INTRODUCTION	1
CLASS CONTENTS	3

Introduction

- 1.1 This document details the descriptive terms and a selection of brand, or sometimes business, names which are present in each PointX class. Generally the descriptive terms given are the singular rather than the plural with any brand names being permutations in common usage and as stipulated within PointX rule configurations. These are therefore likely to be as they are reported in the PointX "Brand" field. NB It has not been possible to give all brand names or permutations in this document however it is hoped that from those given a good idea as to the class content can be gauged. Those documented will be larger chains which are more "household names" so where a class contains only independent or smaller businesses, or a type of feature that does not have a branding, there will be no brands shown. Through the use of reclassification rules it is intended that chain business locations that carry out the same activity will all be reported in the same PointX class regardless of how different suppliers might have classified them in their supplies to PointX. The intention of including branding is so that users can search on well-known chain names, or elements of them, to see which class or classes they are primarily held in. Where possible the fullest "proper" version of the brand name is shown however it is possible that different permutations can also be present. This document has minor updates for the December 2013. Brands are dynamic so over time new brands will appear and obsolete ones disappear so although efforts will be taken to keep up with these changes this cannot be guaranteed. The "Brand" field has been provided as standard in the PointX data supply from December 2010 and is now well populated.
- 1.2 PointX as well as its data providers will classify information to allow reporting within the PointX classification system. The class names used by PointX will not always, by necessity, be able to convey exactly the range of features which are reported within each class. This document is therefore intended to expand on the class names and give a fuller picture of where different types of entity will be reported within the PointX classification system.

- 1.3 For presentation purposes terms or brands are given in alphabetical order. This order should therefore not be taken to be the relative relevance of terms or brands within the class. Terms and brand names are separated. The entity or feature type is given in bold italics with any brand names in normal italic font. Any terms in rounded brackets are colloquial ones that, although instances are not implicitly classified as such, are still likely to exist within the class. Comments are given in square brackets.
- 1.4 The order of information shown is full class number, full class name, alphabetical listing of descriptive terms and major brand names if any are applicable. Group and Category names are also included at the start of class groupings to help see where the classes fall in the full classification system however it is also suggested that the full classification system listing is referred to for ease of reference.
- 1.5 Just because a term or brand is mentioned does not mean that the PointX holding will necessarily be complete for this. Where possible PointX strives for completeness however because of various constraints this is not always possible.
- 1.6 The terms documented are those across all supplies that have the potential to report however for some customers contractual constraints mean that certain permutations may not be available to them. In some cases, although terms are allowed, these might not be populated either nationally or within the customer's geographic configuration.
